

Alaska

Estimations of the scale, scope and cost of child sexual exploitation and abuse (CSEA) in the United States are alarming.¹ The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention reports that approximately one in four girls and one in 20 boys will experience sexual abuse during childhood in US,² while the estimated lifetime cost per child sexual abuse victim is $282,734 million.^{3,4} The good news is that CSEA is preventable. A range of interventions have been identified to help prevent child abuse and sexual violence from occurring in the first place and to minimize the impacts on survivors and their families.^{5,6,7}

Economist Impact’s Out of the Shadows Index, supported by World Childhood Foundation USA, was designed to shine a spotlight on state action—and inaction—to address CSEA. The assessment includes more than 170 metrics aggregated into 22 indicators and grouped into four categories to gauge the extent to which states have introduced essential measures to prevent and respond to this pressing issue. It aims to be a tool to highlight areas for prioritization, drive change, and benchmark progress.

State overview

Alaska has taken several important steps to tackle CSEA, including several recent reviews of the relevant laws, policies and data. There is, however, room for improvement to address the key risk factors for sexual violence and to ensure that all survivors of child sexual abuse have access to trauma-informed and child-centered response mechanisms.

State spotlights

The Alaska Safe Children’s Act (2015) requires the governing body of each school district to establish a training program relating to sexual abuse and sexual assault awareness and prevention for employees as well as students enrolled in grades kindergarten through 12. Programs relating to teen dating violence and abuse awareness and prevention for grades seven through 12 are also required by the Act.⁸

The State of Alaska’s Council on Domestic Violence and Sexual Assault supports community-driven programming for the primary prevention of domestic violence and sexual assault. Campaigns include Stand Up Speak Up, a youth-led media and engagement campaign that aims to equip youth with leadership skills and increase healthy relationship knowledge.⁹

The Alaska Criminal Justice Commission has undertaken several reviews of the data, research, laws and policies relating to sex offenses in Alaska. The resulting reports have highlighted the challenges survivors of sexual abuse can face when interacting with various systems and have proposed several reforms, including improving the access to trauma-informed services for child victims.^{10,11}

Priority areas for future focus

Strengthen the legal framework against sexual violence by establishing a minimum marriage age of 18 without exception and requiring all marriage license applicants to provide official proof of their age.

Boost prevention capacity by:

- Mandating comprehensive sex education and HIV/STI instruction in public schools—requiring that such instruction include information on contraception and consent and be evidence-based, medically accurate and inclusive of all students; and by
- Enacting required, regular training on child sexual abuse and teen dating violence for employees and volunteers of youth-serving organizations beyond schools.¹²

Ensure children have access to services of the highest standards by:

- Amending the statutory definition of Children’s Advocacy Centers (CACs)¹³ to be in line with or tied to the National Children’s Alliance’s National Standards of Accreditation; and by
- Establishing a dedicated funding stream for CACs; Alaska is one of only four states in the index where CACs currently receive no funding support from the state.

Promote a trauma-informed response by mandating ongoing, statewide training for child-protective services investigators, law enforcement and prosecutors on providing a trauma-informed response to child sexual abuse.

Support survivors’ access to justice and compensation by:

- Eliminating the criminal statute of limitations for all child sexual abuse crimes and the civil statute of limitations for child sexual abuse claims against all defendants; and by
- Reforming the state’s eligibility requirements for crime victim compensation to address potential barriers to critical financial assistance for survivors of child sexual abuse (eg, to cover costs related to medical and therapeutic care).¹⁴

3. $282,734 is the average lifetime cost for female victims of non-fatal child sexual abuse (CSA). For male victims, it is approximately $74,691 (although this lower estimate is likely influenced by the insufficient data available on productivity losses). The lifetime cost for victims of fatal CSA per female and male victim was estimated, on average, to be $1,128,334 and $1,482,933, respectively. All estimates pertain to the year 2015.

12. While the Alaska Safe Children's Act requires training for teachers on sexual abuse and sexual assault awareness and prevention, no similar requirement exists for employees of youth-serving organizations beyond schools.
13. Children's Advocacy Centers (CACs) are organizations located throughout the US that help facilitate a multidisciplinary and child-centered response to CSEA. These centers bring together several of the key actors—law enforcement, child protective services investigators, medical and mental health professionals, forensic interviewers, victim advocates, and more—under one roof, helping to minimize the number of times a child has to be interviewed and offering critical therapeutic and other support to children and their families.
14. Key barriers to accessing victim compensation include set timeframes for when an application can be filed and/or requiring a police report as a condition for eligibility.
15. The research for the 2024 index was conducted between March and September 2023. As such, the findings reflect the most recent available data at the time the research was completed.
16. "Comprehensiveness" is assessed based on the following standards: whether the state has a law or statewide rules, regulations or standards with the force of law requiring that sex education and HIV/STI instruction be evidence-based, medically accurate, culturally appropriate and inclusive of all students, and whether related courses are required to include information about contraception and consent.
17. This figure indicates whether statewide laws or policies explicitly prohibit discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation and/or gender identity in all of the following areas: employment, housing, and education.
18. "National standards" refers to the National Children's Alliance's National Standards of Accreditation.
19. These indicators consider whether the state mandates specialized training for child protective services investigators, law enforcement, and prosecutors on CSA and/or trauma at regular intervals (eg, every two years). A separate indicator assesses basic training requirements for mandated reporters in the state more broadly.
20. This indicator considers whether state law establishing eligibility for the state's Crime Victim Compensation Programs provides an explicit time frame exception that is applicable to survivors of CSA (eg, minor victims of crime have up to the age of 21 to file a claim).
21. This indicator assesses whether state law establishing eligibility for the state's Crime Victim Compensation Programs provides alternatives to making a police report for survivors of CSA (such as reports made to child protective services, a sexual assault counselor, or a CAC employee; a restraining or civil protection order granted to the victim; or records from a sexual assault forensic examination). Limited, time bound, or vague exceptions to this requirement were not considered.
